THE LANGUAGE OF THE LAW

Okay, quick quiz: How many of you know what turgid means? We'll get to that later; it's a fun word.

Have you ever read – I mean really read – a criminal statute? The language in some of them is pretty amazing (and often revealing) about the lengths legislators will go to try and cover every eventuality in a given scenario. Statutes have to be so specific as to not leave out anything. As a fan of the English language, I can't help but read some of them and laugh. Here's a favorite: a county ordinance against "Residential Picketing." You can't picket or protest in my county in a residential area and this is a good thing, right? Well, the county lawyers, when they wrote this baby up, must have been pulling on a bottle of bourbon and I think it was July 4th because here's why they thought it was a good thing: "...where residential neighborhoods, often the last bastion for the tired, the weary, and the sick, are entitled to be protected from noisy, tramping, threatening picketers, bent on filling the minds of men, women, and children with fears of the unknown." That wasn't even a Supreme Court opinion; it was just a little ol' ordinance, for crying out loud.

I got to thinking about this after a day of trying to get ninth graders to understand words as simple as "foreign." How, I asked myself, will I get them to divine the meaning of words like "lascivious"? You've probably also seen, while on the toilet perusing the statute book, that some statutes are prefaced with a whole list of definitions, just so we all know exactly what a firearm, explosive, knife, chemical weapon, etc. is. Where the definitions get really interesting is when they are defining not physical objects, but concepts, like obscene: Obscene means the status of material which:

(a) The average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest;

(b) Depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct as specifically defined herein; and

(c) Taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

Got that? It's a good thing that they have included items (a) and (b) because, if it were just (c), that would mean most of our politicians, entertainers, and athletes would be deemed obscene. Still, the "average person" needs a dictionary sitting nearby if they really want to understand all of this – at least for words like "prurient" which Merriam-Webster defines as, "marked by or arousing an immoderate or unwholesome interest or desire; especially: marked by, arousing, or appealing to sexual desire."

Um, sure, but wait – unwholesome? UNWHOLESOME? It has actually come full circle now, back to "obscene" which applies "contemporary community standards." Most of the stuff we call "legalese" or "lawyer mumbo jumbo" boils down to the concept we learned in legal classes as the "reasonable man theory." I try to define this for my students as something you would say to a roomful of people and they would (almost) all nod in agreement – maybe not vigorous nods – but acknowledgement of some sort that, yes, this is right/not right/screwed up/unwholesome.

It's good for students to read statutes and try to understand them because it builds vocabulary. Most of my students, if they have to describe something bad or wrong, will say either "that sucks" or "that's messed up." I try to instill in them an understanding that, as they get older, they will have to read things like "employee manuals" which will have language composed by lawyers. In the manuals are things which can affect their finances, their well-being, and their job status. They should broaden their linguistic horizons just a little. They should at least know what "shall" means, don't you think?

Here's another favorite of mine: the definition of "residence." "Residence" means a home, apartment, condominium, or other dwelling unit. Why not just say, "any dwelling unit"? Recently, there was a fascinating civil case in Florida involving a man who lived on a houseboat. The city of Riviera Beach, Florida, sued Fane Lozman (the owner of the houseboat) for dockage and utility fees under a federal admiralty code governing docked vessels. Lozman countered that the city had no jurisdiction to do so because his dwelling unit was a house, not a vessel. District courts sided with the city, saying, basically, sorry Mr. Lozman, but it's a vessel, as long as it is capable of staying afloat and traveling over water. They discounted Lozman's argument that the structure had no engine.

After several months of "It's a boat!" – "No, it's a house!" Lozman's case traveled (by land) to the Supreme Court of the United States. As only the Supremes can do, they examined every minute detail of the language in the federal code and, in their understanding of the suit, ruled in favor of Mr. Lozman, saying, "We believe that a reasonable observer, looking to the home's physical characteristics and activities, would not consider it to be designed, to any practical degree for carrying people or things on water. And, we consequently conclude that the floating home is not a 'vessel.' " So, there, Riviera Beach, it's a house! Booyah!

Hooray, indeed, for the little guy (who went pro se in district court), though Lozman lost his home long before he got to Washington with this argument. The district court ordered, in their ruling to satisfy the city's lawsuit, that the boat be sold. The city bought it at auction and had it destroyed, hence Lozman's Quixote-like campaign to the steps of the Supreme Court. The point here is that language matters. It will always matter and it will always be argued. "Splitting hairs" is what my dad used to call it, and it is, but the splitting of hairs is the bread and butter of litigation.

This brings us to the wonderful world of turgidity. Florida's obscenity statute, which is a literary gem, defines "nudity" with a few choice descriptions, including "the covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state." I don't want to get real graphic here, but it basically means that guys can't run around – even clothed – all, er, fired up.

Is Pointing an ECW Use of Force?

Americans for Effective Law Enforcement (AELE), in its monthly law journal, examines whether the pointing of an ECW (Electronic Control Weapon) may be considered a use of force, as well as state law assault and battery issues arising from pointing and/or threatening to use an ECW.

In "Pointing and Threatening to Use Electronic Control Weapons," AELE also provides suggestions to consider. Among them:

1. Officers approaching an encounter with stopped motorists, criminal suspects and persons to be subjected to investigative detention can legitimately unholster an ECW when they believe that it is necessary for their own protection or the protection of others, particularly when there is a reasonable fear that the persons might be armed. Waiting to unholster an ECW until it is clearly necessary to fire it could lead to tragic results.

2. The more clear it is that the persons encountered are noncompliant with legitimate orders and requests, the more certain it is that pointing an ECW and threatening to use it after giving a warning is reasonable.

3. Pointing an ECW at persons who are complying with orders, and against whom there appears to be no real need to use force, or threatening to fire it when doing so would not be justified under the circumstances, may constitute an assault under state law, and also unnecessarily escalate encounters to a point where the use of force becomes involved.

To read the complete report, go to http://tinyurl.com/q6qoutb.

This might be a good place to close out this episode of "How the Statute Book Turns." The journalistic creation you have just read (hereinafter referred to as "the article") does not necessarily reflect the opinions or attitudes of Police and Security News and its staff. It was in no way meant to be offensive, unwholesome, or prurient.

Enjoy and be safe out there!

ENHANCING YOUR CAREER PROSPECTS

You're good at your job, but you also know that there are a lot of people you work with who are good at their job, too. If you have a gut feeling that you need to be better than good to take the next step in your career, then you're probably right.

What exactly can you do to stand apart from the crowd of other competent members of your department who also want to better their careers? Here are a few ideas based on the successful careers of other people in the field of policing.

Keep Learning – Knowledge Is Power!

Both technical training and academic education can help enhance your career. Put in a request to attend any in-service technical training class which might enhance your knowledge or understanding of police work. Even if it is not directly related to your present assignment or position, it may give you the background you need for a future promotion or position.

However, with budgets being tight, training is often one of the first casualties in a department. This creates a problem – competition. There could be (and usually are) lots of people who put in requests for a limited number of in-service training classes. You have to separate yourself from your peers, so that your bosses will make the right choice when they decide who to send. "Why should I send him/her?" is the question every boss asks him- or herself as he (or she) decides where the few training dollars can best be spent. (Many years ago, I was a supervisor and I asked one of my employees why I should send him to a one week training class. His answer was, "Because I need a couple of days off and, besides, I've always wanted to visit the city where the training is and see the sights." That was the wrong answer!) You can show your bosses that their money will be well spent by your demonstrated and ongoing motivation, enthusiasm and job performance – not just in the week, or so, before you put in your request, but every day!

Regarding formal education (college), the trend is clear in police work and it has been for a long time. Most police jobs still list a high school diploma or GED as the minimum education level required to take the entrance test, but there is SO much competition for entry-level jobs (and promotions) that, in my opinion, no one should enter the field without a four year degree. (No, I'm not the only one who has this "crazy" idea. August Vollmer was the first police chief in Berkeley, CA, and, in 1916, required that police officers attain college degrees to work in that department.) Someone I know took an entry-level police test (which only required a high school diploma or GED) and found out that not one person in the room had less than a two year degree – most had bachelor's degrees and several had master's degrees!

The logic which follows is that, to be in a position for promotion to higher ranks, you need a higher degree than those you will supervise. In some progressive police departments, sergeants are now expected to have a bachelor's degree; lieutenants are expected to have a master's degree; and higher-level officers are expected to have a master's degree and additional technical or academic training. Don't be left behind!

Professional Associations

Upwardly mobile officers need to know what's going on in the world around them. You can rely on the infrequent updates or random in-service training from your agency or you can decide that your career is too important to leave in their hands. There are many police associations you can join which can put you in touch with other professionals in your area of specialty or your field of interest. You can receive up-to-date information and network with other professionals in other agencies. These associations often provide you with magazines and newsletters which discuss current issues, problems, solutions and trends. Many also have an annual trade show which gives you an opportunity to meet face-to-face with other members to share their experience and knowledge. You get news and information from across the country (or state) as to what is going on in your field. Too many of us don't "get out" much (meaning we don't go beyond the borders of our agency) to see what's going on around the country. There are trends, procedures, statistics, training, etc. which can make you a better professional AND make your agency better. For what you spend taking your family out to a nice dinner, you can join one of these associations for a year. (I recommend that, for a couple of hundred dollars a year, you should join several!) Take a positive step in enhancing your career – aren't you worth it?

Writing

Once you acquire additional knowledge and experience, a true professional should want to share their expertise with others in the field. This can be done informally by talking around the coffeepot or at roll call or with other officers on your shift. However, you can also share information more formally in writing (where you reach a much wider audience). One of the best ways to do that is to write an article for a magazine or for a trade association publication, or even for your local hometown newspaper.

There are many publications (like the one you are reading now!) which provide you with both job specific information and general knowledge about your field. Some publications will work with first time writers who have something of value to share with others in the field. Once you get published (whether online or in print), you'll find it easier to write and publish other articles.

I know a number of professionals who have had interesting information, valuable insights and important career-related advice which could have been shared with others, but all of this was lost

Writing the rules for I-502 Implementation in Washington

The Washington State Liquor Control Board (WSLCB) adopted proposed rules for implementing Initiative 502 which will serve as the basis for Washington's newly created recreational marijuana market and are the result of ten months of research and public input.

The rules achieve the board's stated goal of implementing a tightly regulated and controlled recreational marijuana market. They also align with the Department of Justice's stated areas of concern by addressing out of state diversion of product, traceability of product from start to sale, youth access and other public and consumer safety concerns.

To align with federal guidelines, agency staff filed emergency rulemaking to modify the way the 1,000 foot distance between marijuana locations and the listed exclusion zones is measured. The method of measuring will change from "most common path of travel" to "shortest straight line" from property line to property line.

For more information regarding the implementation of I-502, including summaries of the law and rules and answers to frequently asked questions, visit the WSLCB Web site at www.liq.wa.gov.

because they chose not to share. Most of us are modest enough to think that other people won't care about what we have to say, but you're wrong. Most professionals – in any field – are eager to learn from others.

There are a number of benefits which can be gained by writing an article. You can share your knowledge with others and that should give you a sense of accomplishment and satisfaction. Getting published can get you valuable recognition in your agency (how many other people working with you have gotten published?). And, it can open many doors of opportunity for your career. Don't sell yourself short!

Speaking

We all know that effective communication skills are a "must" for a successful career. Whether impressing your bosses at a promotional oral board, convincing a jury in court, or meeting with a group of local citizens, the ability to convince, persuade and impress others is critical!

Not too many of the people you work with go out and actively solicit opportunities to speak in public. Well, if you want to separate yourself from your competition, then you do just that! Some of the larger agencies have a public relations unit or an agency spokesperson, but those are the exceptions. Generally, most of us run the other way when the boss asks for someone to speak at the local elementary school or to speak at the monthly meeting of the Kiwanis Club. Don't run! Step forward and be confident enough in your abilities to step to the front of that group of people and take charge. Public speaking is a skill like any other skill – the more you do it, the better you will do it.

You have to know what you are talking about, prepare thoroughly and continually polish your speaking skills, but the experience you gain will be extremely valuable when you face oral boards or assessment centers for promotion. A fringe benefit is that the more public speaking you do, the better known you become. Groups may start requesting you personally – that will certainly get you some recognition and will also enhance your position and your career.

Teaching

Most police academies are constantly seeking qualified and professional officers at all ranks to act as instructors in both basic and in-service schools. Most professionals know what they're doing and they do it well (that's why they are professionals!). Why not share your knowledge and skills which you have acquired over the years with the newest class of professionals at a basic academy or with your peers at an in-service training?

Some states, through their POST or such structure, offer an Instructor Development Course (IDC) which will give you the necessary teaching skills, so you can effectively share your knowledge in a classroom. For example, in New York State, this IDC course runs two weeks. Put in a request to attend the next such training class which is run in your area. If you have prepared yourself well, and you have the credentials, experience and desire to teach, you can dramatically increase your visibility and recognition. (And, as an additional incentive for you, I believe that you will gain a better understanding of your area of expertise when you try and explain it in detail to someone else.)

In addition to police academies, many colleges and universities utilize qualified police practitioners to teach criminal justice classes as adjunct (part-time) instructors. This often requires at least a master's degree in criminal justice or a related field, years of practical experience and a proven ability to teach. (As I write this, the college where I teach full-time is seeking two criminal justice professionals – active or retired – to teach part-time who have practical experience in the field of criminal investigation and juvenile delinquency.) The visibility is high and, as long as you comply with your department's "moonlighting" regulations, this can be an excellent way to set you apart from your competition in the department.

It requires a great deal of preparation and development to be successful in policing (or whatever field you are in). You acquire skills and knowledge through education, training and experience. And, you add in a high level of motivation, leadership and commitment to hone these skills. But, to be truly successful, you must rise above your competition to show others that you are a truly effective and competent leader. You can do this by developing your own "career plan" built by following the ideas in this column.

Good luck for a long and successful career.

NEW GUNS FOR 2014

Police and Security News* brings you its 23rd annual roundup of new firearms - straight from America's premier firearms trade show event.

The annual SHOT (Shooting, Hunting, and Outdoor Trade) Show is where the gun industry introduces its new and improved wares. All associated with the industry are welcome to this huge venue of guns and accessories.

This year's show demonstrated that the high demand for handguns over the last few years – particularly those crafted for concealed carry – continues to expand. Never before have there been so many good handguns manufactured explicitly for this purpose. To borrow a popular term, this appears to have become the "new normal" for handgun manufacturers. None of the long established handgun makers failed to deliver new or improved models. Here's a look at some of them.

Beretta Defense Technologies

Beretta presented its Pico pistol and the ARX100 rifle. Not displayed, although claimed to be forthcoming, is the Tactical Model 1301 shotgun.

Of the Pico, Beretta claims it is the thinnest of the new crop of semiauto subcompact pocket pistols. With the following dimensions – overall length of 5.1", barrel length of 2.7", overall grip width of 7.25", height of four inches and a weight of 11.5 ounces with an empty magazine – the Pico is truly thin (and small as well). The slide and frame are stainless steel. The slide has a stainless finish, while the frame has a black Inox finish and its trigger is double-action-only. It has a flush fit slide strop and ambidextrous magazine catch.

The new Beretta Pico is a thin .380 semiauto with a polymer frame and a stainless steel slide and barrel.

You can change calibers of the Pico from .380ACP to .32ACP with only a barrel change. The two supplied six round magazines – one with a flush fit base plate and the other with a finger extension – work with either cartridge. The pinned in chassis holds the fire control system and is the federally required serial numbered part. The chassis and slide can be easily moved into other colored or accessory rail frames. Holsters for the Pico are available from Beretta.

The new Beretta ARX100 multicaliber rifle is a semiauto version of the Beretta M160 which was built for military small arms trials. The ARX100 uses a gas piston system. Its action is held within a molded polymer shell. The butt stock is polymer as well. The cold hammer forged, 16 inch plus barrel is easily removed. All controls are ambidextrous and the ejection pattern can be changed from right to left (the rifle has opposite ejection ports) using a selector near the rear of the action. The first two calibers offered are 5.56 and .300 AAC Blackout. The ARX100 can be completely disassembled without using any tools, as there are no pins used. The rifle weighs seven pounds and ships with one 30 round AR-type steel magazine. Delivery is possible in the second quarter of this year. It has an MSRP of $1,950.

Last, but not displayed at SHOT, is Beretta's Tactical Model 1301 which is based on its Competition Model 1301. The Tactical 1301 is a 12-gauge, gas operated, 18.5" barreled shotgun with a three inch chamber and holds five rounds. Beretta claims the 1301 cycles 36 percent faster than other brands. Ghost ring sights are standard. The stock is synthetic with a black finish. It has an oversized charging handle; an oversized reversible button on its cross bolt safety; and has a large bolt release. A Picatinny rail is on the receiver. Shipping is said to take place early this year. Right now, its MSRP is $1059.

DoubleTap™ Defense LLC

The DoubleTap Tactical Pocket Pistol (DTPP), a patented two shot over and under derringer, was first offered in .45ACP and 9x19mm. Now come new chamberings of .40S&W and .45 Colt/1.5"

DoubleTap™ is offering a host of new chamberings for its two shot pistol, along with a new rubber training grip.

.410 shot shell. The DTPP weighs 13 ounces with aluminum frame and 15 ounces with a titanium frame. The three inch MIL-STD, corrosion-resistant, black finished stainless steel barrel assembly can be had with or without porting. Its overall length is 5.5", the height is 3.9" and it is .665" wide. It has a double-action trigger, with a smooth, curved trigger face and a pull weight in excess of ten pounds.

I reviewed one in .45ACP with a ported barrel. I anticipated, and was not disabused of thinking, this combination would hurt to shoot when I touched off two rounds of 230-grain JRN factory ammo without gloves. It hurt. My friends and I then wore either a shooting or a carpenter's glove for further shooting. (I wore both at the same time!) Despite this, we all liked this little guy, as it does fill its apparent purposes of being good for deep cover or "last-ditch" applications.

The MSRP for the complete pistol with aluminum frame and nonported barrel is $499; with ported barrel, $569. With a titanium frame and a nonported barrel, the MSRP is $729; with ported barrel, $799. Caliber changes can be done with the optional barrel assemblies. The MSRP of the barrel assembly in all calibers, with two DoubleTap loading devices: nonported, $199; ported, $269. Also new this year is a slip-on rubber "training" grip for $25.00.

FNH USA has two new AR-15 rifles – one with a fixed stock and one which is collapsible.

FNH USA

FNH USA is the current manufacturer of the M16A4 and M4 series rifles for the U.S. military, but until now has not made civilian legal versions. This has been corrected with the production of two models of civilian legal (where not prohibited) AR-15 rifles. These are the FN 15™ Carbine and the FN 15 Rifle.

From the FN press release: "The FN 15 Carbine has a 16 inch chrome lined, alloy steel barrel and is available in 5.56mm NATO. The polymer forearm and butt stock are both black and the stock is collapsible into six positions, making the total length 31.9" inches at its shortest and 35.2" at its longest. The FN 15 Carbine also features an A2-style compensator and a 1:7 inch RH twist rate. It comes with fixed A2-style front sights, a removable M4-style rear carrying handle, and one GI pattern 30 round aluminum magazine."

Also from the press release: "The FN 15 Rifle has a 20 inch, chrome lined, alloy steel barrel and is available in 5.56mm NATO. The polymer forearm and fixed butt stock are both black and the total length is 39.5". The FN 15 Rifle also features an A2-style compensator and a 1:7 inch RH twist rate. It comes with fixed A2-style front sights, a removable M4-style rear carrying handle and one GI pattern 30 round aluminum magazine." The MSRP of both is to be announced.

GLOCK®, Inc.

The front-runner from GLOCK is the M42 which is a completely USA manufactured, single column, .380ACP chambered subcompact. The M42 is all "GLOCK" from sights on down. The M42 holds 6 + 1 rounds; weighs 12.35 ounces without the magazine; has a 3.25" barrel; and is .94" wide, 4.13" tall and has an overall length of 5.94". It ships with two magazines. The frame either has the rough textured finish of larger GLOCKs, or something close to it, on the front, rear and sides of the grip.

Early input from an admittedly biased GLOCK owner has the recoil as not at all painful (and he has shot a wide range of .380ACP since getting the gun). He also found its accuracy to be on par with his experience with other GLOCKs. The M42 has an MSRP of $475.

GLOCK's other new model is the Fourth Gen M41 which is a long slide version of the M21 and is chambered in .45ACP. The barrel length is now

The new GLOCK® M42 in .380ACP

5.3" and it has an almost identical slide to that used in the M34 and M35 long slide models. The only change is that the large opening in the slides of the latter pistols is gone. The overall length of the M41 is 8.9" and it weighs 27.5 ounces with an empty magazine.

Supplied with the M41 is the Multiple Backstrap System which consists of two sizes of beavertails and two sizes of lower backstraps, all of which are attached using a longer upper rear frame pin. (The pin and tool needed for installation are included.) All of this comes in at an MSRP of $775. I lucked into being able to shoot one briefly and with factory 230-grain ball ammo. Muzzle flip was definitely less than that found with the GLOCK M21, due to the M41 having more weight forward due to slide and barrel length.

Kahr Arms' economically priced CT45 in .45ACP

Kahr Arms®

Kahr Arms, which is known for its high quality, double-action-only semiautos, has continued reviewing its existing PM series pistols with the goal of making more affordable versions. This year, Kahr offers the CT40 (.40S&W) and CT45 (.45ACP), derived from the TP Series. Kahr Arms did not use quality cutting measures to attain the now reduced price, either. All the company did was to supply only one magazine with each pistol. Both pistols now have an MSRP of $499.

Kel-Tec

Kel-Tec has two new bullpup rifles, the RDB and M43. The RDB is 27.4" long, while the M43 is 26.2" overall. The weight on the RDB is about seven pounds; the M43 is heavier by one pound.

Kel-Tec's M43 bullpup rifle in caliber .223

Both use an adjustable, short stroke gas piston system and are chambered in 5.56mm NATO/.223 Remington. Both accept standard AR-15 magazines. Both eject downward and have interchangeable parts, with 17.5" barrels which are threaded for muzzle brake or suppressor. Their bolt releases are ambidextrous and the magazine releases are forward of the knuckles of one's shooting hand.

The differences are in their furniture. The RDB (Rifle Downward ejecting Bullpup) is polymer and has a Picatinny rail placed top and bottom. The M43 has folding sights, a wood pistol grip and handguard, along with a vented top heat shield. Kel-Tec expects the rifles to have an MSRP from $1900 to $2000, with a potential fourth quarter of 2014 availability.

Kimber Mfg., Inc.

The Kimber Micro – introduced last year, but delayed – is now a reality. The Micro is a subcompact 1911 chambered for .380ACP. The Kimber Web site shows four versions – the Micro Carry, Micro Carry Stainless, Micro CDP and Micro CDP (LG). (LG stands for [Crimson Trace®] Lasergrips®.) For anyone who is already habituated to the fit and function of a 1911, having a backup or deep concealment pistol with identical controls is a major plus as there's nothing to learn or unlearn.

All Micro pistols hold six rounds; weigh +/- 13.4 ounces; have a 2.75" stainless steel barrel; an aluminum frame; and use an eight pound recoil spring on a full-length guide rod. Their overall length is 5.6"; the height is four inches; the width is 1.08"; and they have a trigger pull weight (factory setting) of approximately seven pounds. Other options, such as front strap checkering and Crimson Trace Lasergrips, are reflected in increased MSRPs.

The Micro Pistols' MSRPs run from $651 for the Micro Carry, to $679 for the Micro Carry Stainless, $1121 for the Micro CDP, up to $1406 for the Micro CDP (LG).

ON THE COMPETITION.

THE NEW P320. We asked leading law enforcement professionals what they required in a pistol. They told us they needed safe, tool-free disassembly. A smooth, consistent trigger pull. A proper fit for any hand size—not just a back strap. We listened. And carefully followed orders. The result is the P320. A superior pistol in every way.

Right now, options include three synthetic and one pistol grip stock in black or camo colorations. Also, there's a six position tactical stock and a stock with an adjustable comb. Forend designs range from field and hunting to tactical – again, in black or camo. In essence, FLEX is an easy "do-it-yourself" means of fitting the M500 and 590 shotguns to an individual's need and comfort. The MSRP ranges from $692 to $868.

Remington®'s new R51 is an updated version of its Model 51 which was manufactured in the early 20th century.

Remington® Arms Co., Inc.

Remington again went back in its handgun history book to come up with a potentially excellent pocket pistol, the Model R51, as Remington made the John Pedersen designed M51 in the early part of the 20th century. The new R51 does differ from the M51, which was chambered in .32ACP and .380ACP, in that the R51 is chambered in 9x19mm+P. (The buzz is a .40S&W chambering is at least being considered.)

Be that as it may, the R51 weighs 20 ounces and holds seven rounds in its aluminum magazine. It has an aluminum frame and stainless steel slide with a 3.5 inch barrel and has an ample and flared ejection port. The magazine release is behind the trigger guard and is ambidextrous. The pistol has a grip safety, but does not have any other external safety. Fixed sights are used. The overall length is six inches; the width is .96 of an inch; and trigger pull weight is in the six pound range. The R51 has nice lines – sleek, if you will.

The operating system is a locked breach, blowback action. The net effect and benefit of this hybrid action is allowing for the use of a lighter weight recoil spring which, here, surrounds the barrel. The advantage of this spring location is that the barrel and slide now sit lower in your gripping hand and should make controlling muzzle flip when shooting more manageable. The R51 has a grip to slide angle of 20 degrees. The front strap is checkered, while the trigger guard is undercut to allow for a higher grip. Trigger pull is said to be light and long. Combining all of the above should then make for a good pointing pistol (as was the original). The kicker here is an MSRP of just $389!

SIG SAUER®

SIG SAUER is moving into an entirely new area and in a big way with the striker-fired P320™ chambered for 9x19mm, .357SIG or .40S&W. Coming from a company well-known and appreciated by many who have embraced having an exposed hammer on their pistol, this is a huge step and one which should also be well appreciated by many who prefer the striker firing system.

In addition to striker-fire, the P320 is modular and follows on the P250® pistol – another "first" from SIG SAUER. How this works is, since only the chassis of the gun is serialized and as such is considered the firearm, frames, slides and even calibers can be switched around, allowing the single pistol to be "customized" to the wishes and needs of the individual. Having reviewed the P250, I didn't find it difficult to make such swaps. With the P320, you only need to buy one "gun," then buy the parts you need to make your alternative version of the P320. Its MSRP is $713.

S&W has released an M&P version of its BODYGUARD® .380.

Smith & Wesson®, Inc.

The S&W Pro Series of handguns now has the M986 Pro Series revolver which weighs 34.9 ounces. It is chambered in 9x19mm; holds seven rounds in its titanium cylinder which is cut for moon clips; has a stainless steel frame; and has a precision crowned five inch barrel. A lighter than standard mainspring is used. The sights are Patridge front, with an adjustable rear; the barrel and frame are glass bead finished; and the M986 has synthetic grips. This Pro Series revolver has an MSRP of $1149.

Smith also has the M929 "Jerry Miculek Signature Model," made to the specifications of this world-class champion shooter by the S&W Performance Center™. The length of the stainless steel barrel is 6.5" which is set up for a removable compensator. The frame is also stainless steel. The cylinder is titanium alloy, holds eight rounds of 9x19mm and is cut for moon clips. The teardrop hammer and trigger are chromed and the action is Performance Center hand tuned and synthetic grips are provided for good gripping. Overall length is 12.25", with a weight of 44.2 ounces and the M929 is glass bead finished. The whole package goes for an MSRP of $1129.

In semiautos, the BODYGUARD® .380ACP pocket pistol is now part of the M&P Series, and the pistol now has fish scale serrations on the rear of its slide for easier and more secure slide manipulation. And, now – as do other pistols in the M&P Series – the BODYGUARD .380 ships with two magazines. It has an MSRP of just $379.

Springfield Armory USA®

Springfield has been on a roll with its XD-S™ compact semiauto. A long time back, Springfield took a good look at what was, at the time, a little noticed pistol made in Croatia and saw its true potential. The XD Series semiauto and all its variations are the result. The latest SD iteration is the XD-S 4.0, a four inch barreled version of the 3.3 inch barreled XD-S subcompact pistol chambered in .40&W. Otherwise, the XD-S 4.0 is a single column, polymer frame, steel slide pistol with Melonite finish.

A nice safety feature is that its disassembly lever cannot be operated if a magazine is in the pistol. Two changeable backstraps are supplied, along with two magazines and a polymer holster, a magazine loader and a dual magazine carrier in a hard-sided storage or transport case. The 4.0 should be available as of this writing. MSRP is $599 for black and $669 for two-tone models.

Springfield's reputation, though, was made with its 1911s. Recently, the Range Officer™ Model, which is a full-sized 1911 chambered in 9x19mm, was introduced as a competition oriented pistol, but which could also serve as a defensive arm. The Range Officer features everything necessary to achieve these goals. Its MSRP is $977.

Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc.

Ruger® continues to have something new in handguns. This year, it's two revolvers: the LCRx™ and the Match Champion™. The LCRx is chambered in .22LR, .22MRF and .38 Special+P and has all of the features of the existing double-action-only Light Compact Revolver (LCR®). An exposed hammer has been added and now provides a single-action, as well as a double-action, trigger. The LCRx weighs 13.50 ounces. It has a barrel length of 1.875", an overall length of 6.50" and a height of 4.50". Its width is 1.28" and it has an MSRP of $529.

Ruger's other revolver is the Match Champion (MC), Model GP100®, with competition features such as having a 4.2", partially underlugged and slab-sided barrel. It has a Novak® LoMount Carry model rear sight and the front sight is fiber optic. The action is factory tuned for smoothness and a Hogue® wraparound, stippled hardwood grip enhances gripping. The stainless steel MC weighs 38 ounces; is chambered in .357 Magnum; and holds seven rounds. It has an MSRP of $899.

Walther® Arms, Inc.

The existing Walther PPQ M2® with a four inch barrel is offered in 9x19mm, .357SIG and .40S&W. It weighs 20 ounces and has a polymer frame, with a Tenifer™ coated steel barrel and slide. Other features, such as the changeable backstraps, good grip surface treatment and an excellent trigger pull, make for an easy to shoot pistol. This year, the PPQ M2 was introduced with a longer five inch barrel which, at first glance, doesn't look to be all that important, but it can be. With the additional slide and barrel weight out front, muzzle lift is dampened and, with sights now further apart, you get finer sighting. A downside of the lengthening can show up when your waist to "seat" distance isn't

Conclusion

Never before has there been this large a selection of guns for personal defense by lawmen and nonsworn citizens alike. SHOT 2014 was, once again, quite well attended, with vendors upbeat on the state of the industry. It looks to be another good year for the firearms business and for firearms consumers. The only problem is a good one – having too many choices. Most of our wallets just can't take it!

The EB2 Backup is a compact, dual output flashlight designed as a backup light for patrol officers or as a primary light for plainclothes officers. It features a Total Internal Reflection (TIR) lens which creates a blinding, far-reaching beam. Powered by two 123A lithium batteries, this dual output light comes in two versions: a click-type tail cap switch or tactical tail cap switch. To activate the EB2 with a click-type switch, just press or click the tail cap push button once for the tactical level 500 lumen high beam. Return to off and press or click again within two seconds to activate the five lumen low beam which is useful for tasks which don't require a lot of light.

MAG INSTRUMENT, INC.

The newest tactical flashlight from Maglite® is the Mag-Tac® Rechargeable flashlight which utilizes a lithium-ion phosphate battery instead of a typical lithium-ion or nickel cadmium battery. The result is a flashlight which is safer to charge and has a very long life span. It is available with two different body designs: one with a flat or plain bezel, and the other with a crowned or scalloped bezel. The crowned bezel version offers three output modes – momentary, high and strobe – while the flat bezel offers momentary, high and low output modes.

This latest offering has an output of 520 lumens (high), with a run time of 2.5 hours at full power or 4.5 hours on its Power Save mode.

This newest flashlight features a charge time of 2.5 hours and comes with a charging dock, USB charging cord and AC and DC adapter plugs.

New Products from SHOT Show 2014

The Latest and Greatest Technology

The annual SHOT Show® has traditionally focused on promoting new firearms, ammunition, outdoor apparel and related products. However, over the past several years, this event has included a law enforcement section which has grown considerably. Because this event is normally held at the beginning of every year, scores of manufacturers now utilize this trade show to introduce many of their new products. To follow are a number of these new products which we feel are of particular value to the law enforcement community:

Next Generation DeltaPoint® 2 Red Dot Sight

The new DeltaPoint 2 features a lightweight magnesium housing, while the squared aspheric lens delivers the widest field of view and the best image quality ever produced in a red dot sight. Dot bloom is virtually eliminated thanks to a new lens coating, offering shooters a crisp, clean dot for precise and immediate shots on target.

The DeltaPoint 2 retains Leupold's patented Motion Sensor Technology which instantly detects any motion, activates the illumination and adjusts the brightness to the environment and now it also includes a manual brightness adjustment for those who prefer brighter or dimmer dots. Also added is a master on/off switch, so the unit can be completely powered down to prevent excess battery drain during transportation or storage.

New Tifosi Tactical Optics Line

Tifosi Optics, Inc. has launched a new line of eyewear designed for law enforcement and shooting sports. The Tifosi Tactical collection is available in a single lens option or an interchangeable option with three lenses; all meet or exceed ANSI Z87.1 safety standards for impact, optical clarity and eye coverage. The frames are made from Grilamid TR-90NZ which has a very high degree of impact strength and the lenses are manufactured with a shatterproof polycarbonate material. All three models are available in nonreflective black matte frames and come with a protective zippered case, cleaning bag and limited lifetime warranty.

Night Vision Company Now Offers A Ten Year Warranty

Night Vision Depot (NVD), of Allentown, PA, is proud to announce that, starting this year, most of their NVD manufactured night vision products will carry a full ten year warranty. Included in the list of products are binoculars, monoculars, night vision goggles, and others. This move doubles the current warranty and is a testament to the high standards and performance which NDV places upon all of its products.

According to Bill Grube, President of Night Vision Depot, "The quality of the intensifier tubes and equipment being manufactured by ITT Exelis is presently unsurpassed in the world and a warranty extension seems like a logical and prudent measure. This will strengthen our business practices, product lines, and NVD's strong commitment to producing and supporting the highest quality night vision and thermal imaging equipment within the marketplace."

For more information on Night Vision Depot and their products, visit their Web site at www.nvdepot.com.

What Is the Emerging Drug Threat of Today?

Synthetic marijuana, known also as Spice, K2, Fake Weed and more, is popular among young people. Of the illicit drugs used by high school seniors, the DEA reports spice was second to marijuana.

Colorado health authorities in September of last year announced that they – along with the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention – are investigating a rash of hospitalizations and three deaths believed to be the result of smoking synthetic marijuana. And, real marijuana is legal in Colorado. CNN reports on the topic in What You Need to Know about Synthetic Drugs. (http://tinyurl.com/kl5yyua).

The Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment's initial investigation of an outbreak of illnesses tied to the use of synthetic marijuana identified nearly a dozen product names as possible sources of the synthetic marijuana which sent dozens to hospitals beginning in August.

Dr. Tista Ghosh, Interim Chief Medical Officer for the state, said, "While these products were identified in the investigation, synthetic marijuana products can be repackaged and sold under many names. The safe thing for people to do is not use any synthetic marijuana. No brand is safe."

Product names identified in the investigation are: Black Mamba, Crazy Monkey, Crazy Clown, Dead Man Walking, Funky Monkey, Sexy Monkey, SinX, Spice, TenX, Twilight and 3X.

Patients being interviewed as part of the outbreak suffered symptoms including disorientation, delirium, confusion, anxiety, lethargy, agitation, paranoia, hallucinations and seizures. Some patients were violent, unresponsive or even comatose.

DVR Assessment and Video Recovery Training Course Now Available

Ocean Systems, provider of forensic video analysis solutions, is now offering a three day training course, DVR Assessment and Video Recovery, which is recommended for anyone responsible for the recovery of digital video evidence from CCTV systems. Students will perform evidentiary recovery from multiple DVRs using various methods and techniques, including exporting the native files, copying the original recorded files, video capture, network connectivity, and acquisition and exporting. Included are lectures, real-world examples, and hands-on exercises.

The course was developed based on the Law Enforcement & Emergency Services Video Association (LEVA)'s "Best Practices for the Acquisition of Digital Multimedia Evidence" with consideration also given to other industry related guidelines.

Also provided will be instruction on Ocean Systems' latest solutions for DVR recovery and digital evidence management, including Omnivore, the Omnivore Field Kit, and their soon to be released digital evidence management solution.

Upon completion, participants will be familiar with common technical and legal issues related to the acquisition and use of digital video evidence and will be provided with a certificate of completion (worth 24 hours of Vendor Training) which can be applied towards a LEVA certification.

For more information, including pricing, please visit www.oceansystems.com or call (800)253-7516.

Distance Learning Up Close: Part II

Rebecca Kanable

Are you ready, willing, and able to begin your online learning experience?

While working to obtain a bachelor of arts degree in criminal justice administration, Marco Tapia would sit in class wearing his patrol uniform. With one ear, he'd listen to the police radio. If a call went out and no one else was available, or if an officer needed backup, he'd leave class and head for his squad car parked close to his classroom building on the Columbia College campus in Columbia, Missouri.

"I did this for four years," says Tapia, who today is the Public Servants Coordinator at Columbia College. "It was tough, but I made it through. For anyone, especially a working adult, the decision to go back to school takes a certain level of commitment. You have to commit to your future; that's what education is – your future. It's the key to doors which may not be open to you without a degree."

Currently, Tapia is finishing the last class he needs to obtain a Master of Science in criminal justice. "What motivated me for my master's degree is that I want to teach," he says. "I've got 27 years in policing and public policy, but, in order to teach at the college level, I need to have a master's degree."

The work he's done in the Columbia College master's program has been entirely online. Initially, Tapia, 60, didn't think he would adapt to the online learning environment, but now he wouldn't study any other way. He explains, "From Monday to Sunday, I know what tasks I need to accomplish; I know what my responsibilities are for school." Having additional responsibilities for work and family, he appreciates the flexibility the online learning environment affords.

In his role as a college recruiter, he travels from coast to coast and takes the classroom with him. Online programs are tough, Tapia tells prospective students. "You have to work," he says. "We're not going to give you a degree.... When you put a cap and gown on and someone hands you a diploma, I can guarantee you've earned it."

I asked Tapia to share some of the lessons he's learned as a student. Looking for assessment tools and advice, I also toured online campuses and found a sample course anyone can try, a course on the foundations of online learning and many student resources.

Are You Motivated?

Overall, the path to graduation is not easy, but it's easier if you're motivated. "If you're married, look at your spouse and look at your children," Tapia says. "What can you do as a provider to help make their lives better? What can you do to make your life better? You make yourself more competitive, and the way that you do that, especially in today's work environment, is you have to make yourself stand out above everyone else. A lot of times, you can do that through education."

Tapia, a POST generalist instructor, has long believed that an educated officer is a well-rounded officer. "You don't have to have a college degree, but you do need to maintain a level of expertise within your profession," Tapia says, noting that it's important for an officer to remain up-to-date and knowledgeable about new case law and new police practices or social theories, for example.

Are You Disciplined?

In addition to being motivated, you need to be disciplined. "It's easy to slough off," Tapia said. "You don't have a professor saying, 'You need to do this' or 'You need to do that.' It's up to you. You have to be responsible."

While Tapia has friends who seem to wait to do their class work at the very last minute, he prefers to spread the work out. At the beginning of the week, on Monday and Tuesday, he posts comments on the classroom discussion board. He'll continue checking the discussion board throughout the week and respond as needed. Wednesday to Sunday, he focuses on completing the required reading, research and writing.

How Well Will Web-based Courses Fit Your Needs and Lifestyle?

Columbia College offers a multiple-choice self-assessment quiz. Some of the questions include: How would you describe your need to take a course now? How do you classify yourself as a reader? How helpful to you is classroom discussion?

"The quiz is designed to see if you're more equipped intellectually and personally for online or if you're more of a social person who would benefit greater from the in-seat, classroom experience of learning," Tapia says. "It helps a new student determine if they are better suited for study within the online environment or better suited for the classroom environment."

Often, the flexibility of the online program may be the deciding factor. That was the case with Tapia, a social person who enjoys in person discussion and debate.

How Tech Savvy Are You?

Do you have the computer skills needed for online learning? Columbia College Admissions has a list of questions to help you test your technology IQ. The list is based on research developed by Elizabeth Reed Osika, Manager, Instructional Services, Purdue University Calumet.

Some of the questions include:

- Can you save and send E-mail?
- Can you send and open E-mail attachments?
- Can you save files to an external storage device?
- Can you use WinZip (or similar software) to compress or decompress files?
- Can you create a PowerPoint® presentation with graphics?
- Can you create a Web page using HTML or a page generator?

"If you answer 'yes' to a majority of the questions, you have basic computer skills," Tapia said. If you answer 'no' to all of the questions, a message pops up saying, "Web-based courses currently may not be the best alternative for you. Talk to a counselor for more assistance."

If there's a specific program with which you are unfamiliar, for instance, PowerPoint, you may need to watch an online tutorial.

Can't Type?

At first, Tapia was leery of the technical requirements. While he has basic computer skills, he freely admits that he doesn't type very well. Recognizing his shortcoming, Tapia purchased a speech recognition software program which helps him by turning his talking points into text.

"[There's] one thing I can do well and that's dictate like there's no tomorrow," he says. "My advice to anyone who wants to get into school: Don't let a fear of technology dampen your desire to learn. Trust me when I say that, if I can meet the challenges of online education, anyone can."

Try a Class

In 2001, Fairleigh Dickinson University (FDU) became the first college in the nation to require all students to complete one online course per year of study. According to the FDU Web site, the requirement was made to prepare students for a commitment to lifelong learning.

The Global Challenge, a student's first course in the University Core, is available online for visitors to explore. Go to http://webcampus.fdu.edu and log in using "fduguest" (all lower case) for both the username and password. Click on "The Global Challenge" on the right side of the screen under "My Courses." This three credit course and other courses at FDU are delivered using a Blackboard learning management system.

As you explore "The Global Challenge," you can click on "Course Information" and find the course syllabus, student handbook, student resources, information on grades and grading, and a country profile assignment. Clicking on "Course Material," you can find the content covered in the course.

Making the Grade: Three Mistakes to Avoid

1) Don't procrastinate. Whether it's waiting to participate in a discussion board or waiting to do other class work, Magers says, a common mistake students make is procrastinating. "Procrastinators sometimes struggle in these courses until they learn to stop procrastinating," he says. Magers was a police officer, an active Army Reservist and had a part-time job when he achieved his master's degree and doctorate. He also had family. How did he do so much at one time?

Outside of his work time, he made use of small amounts of time. If there was a half hour, he didn't look at it as time to do nothing; he used the time he had. "I found that the better I managed my time, the more time I had for all my activities," he says.

He advises students to think of time as precious. Read a chapter or do one discussion board post when you can. Don't sit down and try to do all the work at the same time.

2) Discuss! Often students are required to participate in a discussion board. Students respond to a discussion topic or question and interact with fellow students and the instructor when they have comments or questions. They are graded on that activity. One of the most common mistakes students make when they first start an online course is they don't understand that they have to participate actively in the discussion boards.

Magers says, "They think they can wait until everyone else comments.... I tell students to jump in early with their discussion." When students discuss topics, he says they should respond intellectually, not emotionally. There's also a proper etiquette for online discussions which should be followed. "You can disagree with a fellow student without getting involved in an online shouting match," Magers comments.

3) Don't plagiarize. Plagiarism can be another problem. Cutting and pasting someone else's work may be easy, but so is using plagiarism detection software which, Magers said, most universities have.

According to the FDU Web site, some of The Global Challenge sections do not meet face-to-face because they are not close to an FDU campus, but the majority meet face-to-face four or five times during the term.

Information on books and DVDs which need to be purchased and readings which are available online are listed. Assignments are given weekly. Assignment subfolders include an introduction, assigned readings and critical thinking assignment. Assignments alternate between writing an essay and participating in a discussion on the discussion board.

FDU's online programs provide unit summaries from the instructor, videos, case studies, and an active classroom. The FDU Web site suggests getting into the habit of logging onto the Web site every day to keep up with threaded discussions and check for new announcements from your instructor. Generally, the guideline for taking The Global Challenge online is that you should expect to spend about six hours on the course weekly.

Many tools are available online including blogs, calendars, contacts, a glossary, a registration tool, and a class roster.

Ronald Calissi, Executive Associate Dean and Director of the School of Administrative Science at FDU, reports that two-way videoconferencing using Skype and InteractiveTV (ITV) is being incorporated into some online classes. If students don't have videoconferencing capabilities, they may instead be able to sit in on a conference call.

Whether learning takes place online or in a classroom, Paulette Laubsch, DPA, Associate Professor at Fairleigh Dickinson University, said the learning outcomes are the same. Laubsch says that is done not only for program accreditation, but for uniformity. "It's not just these are the course objectives; we hope you get something out of it," she said. "Teachers have to show that there is an evolution, a transformation of the student through the program. Writing skills, communication skills and critical thinking skills are all assessed."

College 100

Another way to learn about learning online is to take a course designed specifically to do just that. American Military University requires its undergraduates to take COLL100 – Foundations of Online Learning as one of their first courses. A description of the eight week course says it is designed to provide a solid foundation for undergraduate study in the online environment. Students will be introduced to learning theory, the tools available in the online classroom and campus, and online research. The identification of personal learning style allows students to improve their study/learning techniques and prepares them to succeed in college level courses. Students are introduced to formatting and citation styles. APUS (American Public University System) policies and procedures are addressed, and emphasis is placed on written communication to assist students in the transition to the online environment.

After successfully completing the three hour course, students will be able to:

1. Analyze, discuss and apply the habits of a successful online student;
2. Examine and discuss APUS policies and procedures;
3. Identify major formatting and citation styles used in various programs;
4. Produce written assignments in accordance to APA standards;
5. Develop a time management plan to support academic progress and manage daily life;
6. Identify personal learning and motivational styles or attributes, career orientation traits and demonstrate how that knowledge can be used to contribute to academic and career success;
7. Discuss the concept and relevance of information literacy;
8. Demonstrate the ability to conduct basic research using the online research center and other electronic and/or library resources; and
9. Explain and demonstrate academic honesty and discuss its implications for scholarly work.

Online Support

Common Questions

Often, students ask the same questions. Jeffrey Magers, Ed.D., Associate Professor in the Professional Studies Department, Law and Public Policy/Homeland Security/Criminal Justice, at the California University of Pennsylvania, responds to common questions about online learning.

1. How much time am I going to need to devote weekly to a course? Magers doesn't give a specific number of hours. The time needed to complete course work will vary with the instructor, the subject matter and the student. While students may think online courses are less work, the opposite may be true. "In the online environment, students are active learners," Magers says. "They have to participate." Instructors can track all online activity by students. Did they open up the assignment? Did they open up the reference material? Did they look at the course objective?

2. How much reading will be required? While the amount of reading will vary, Magers says to buy the books the instructor asks you to buy. Students sometimes make the mistake of thinking they can get the same information online. When a professor says read something, he says read it and that includes instructions. Often, Magers finds himself giving students lower grades because they aren't reading or following instructions about a paper's content or format.

3. How much writing will be required? While police report writing and academic writing are not the same, Magers has found that, for the most part, police officers underestimate their ability to write in an academic setting and they do quite well.

4. Am I ready? Some schools will offer an orientation to online instruction. California University of Pennsylvania's Global Online Orientation serves as a starting point to determine if Web-based course work is a good fit. Global Online Orientation provides a step-by-step guide to understanding more about California University of Pennsylvania, and offers a "test drive" of the course management system – Desire2Learn – to see firsthand how the Web courses work.

5. What technology is required? A high-speed Internet connection and a modern computer can make a difference. Having a five-year-old computer and a slow Internet connection can make watching a video or downloading a document agonizingly slow, Magers says. Students can click on a CAL U Web site link to do a system check. Computer and technical requirements are listed, as are the mobile devices which can be used to access limited versions of the online courses.

6. How difficult is it to learn the instructional platform? Typically, Magers says the instructional platforms (the programs which provide online courses) are very user-friendly and designed not to discourage students. Instructional platforms also have instructional videos to assist in learning how to navigate through courses. "Online instruction has been going on with great intensity in the last decade and a lot of issues have been worked out," Magers says.

7. Who provides technical support? Responses to the question of who provides tech support can vary widely from one college or university to the next, Magers said. Some schools have 24/7 tech support; others may offer tech support only during the day.

8. Where's the library? Students who have not been in school for a while may not be aware of the online resources which are available. Students may never need to go into a library building.

9. Can I really do this? "You can do this," Magers encourages. "If you select a good program, you will find value in it. Online instruction today, for the most part, from regionally accredited universities, is good, solid education. It's available to you. You can be successful with it."

Justice and Security at the University of Phoenix Southern California Campus, says the University of Phoenix provides support in multiple ways.

The PhoenixConnect® academic social network includes more than 800,000 University of Phoenix students, alumni, faculty members and staff. Within the network, there are more than 30 learning and support communities staffed by community managers and nearly 3,000 special interest groups.

The University of Phoenix University Library subscribes to more than 300 distinct online information services which provide scholarly content generally unavailable through free Web search utilities. "Ask a Librarian" provides research assistance when needed. Students can E-mail a staff librarian and receive a response within six hours – even on weekends.

The Center for Writing Excellence helps students brush up on grammar basics and put the finishing touches on a paper.

Do you need help with math? The Center for Mathematics Excellence offers individual or group tutoring.

In addition to having tech support, the University of Phoenix has on its Web site a page devoted to recent changes to improve the online experience. For example, one recent change was introducing a single click attachment to attach documents to a message in discussion.

Using Smartphones to Get Smart

Smartphones are increasingly playing a part in online learning. For example, University of Phoenix students with an iPhone® or an Android™-based smartphone can stay connected to their course work and classmates from wherever they have a data connection.

With this mobile app, students can communicate and participate in class discussions right from their phones; keep track of grades; receive real-time notifications and alerts when instructors post grades; access drafts and discussions, even when offline; and view course syllabus and class materials.

Keep Your Eyes on the Prize

Many tools and resources are available to help students get through school. Tapia says you should use them. Obtaining a college degree sets you up for success, he says. "Doors will open once you have your degree," he said.

NOT MY IDEA OF A "BURGER JOINT"...

Police officers were dispatched to a local hamburger grill in Lovejoy, Georgia, after a customer made a rather unusual complaint. The hungry patron complained that she had ordered a cheeseburger with bacon, but instead had received a cheeseburger topped with a half smoked marijuana cigarette – yucky poo! One of the burger "chefs" fessed up and said she'd been smoking pot while on duty and had "misplaced" the joint. In addition to being arrested, she was also fired. (Placing a lit marijuana cigarette on a slab of meat and smothering it with "special sauce" can hardly be considered "misplacing" it!)

It's not uncommon for prisoners to dislike their cellmates – or their housemates... A man was placed under house arrest on drug related charges in Livorno, Italy. The police were more than surprised when the man made a daring escape from his home and went straight to police headquarters. He begged the police to send him back to prison because he couldn't stand his wife's incessant nagging for one more day. The officers took pity on him, as did a judge who ordered him to serve out the rest of his sentence behind bars. (Getting released from prison is called "parole" – getting released from a bad marriage is called "divorce"!)

Well, that's a shame! He obviously would have been a very personable salesclerk... A man went to a McDonald's restaurant in Norfolk, Virginia, in order to apply for a job. When the store manager explained to him that applications were only taken online and not at the restaurant, the potential applicant became agitated and lifted his shirt to reveal a gun tucked in his waistband. The manager then pretended that the gun had convinced him to make an exception in his case and asked him to sit down while she went to get a paper application. While he was waiting, she called the police and they promptly arrived while the man was still filling out the form. ("Hey, I'll show you mine if you show me yours!")

Arresting a customer is probably not a very business savvy tactic if you're hoping for a tip... In Bedford, New Hampshire, a man stands accused of robbing a taxi driver and getting away with cash and a cell phone. The robbery wasn't too difficult for him, but he apparently struggled to find a way to make a clean getaway. Then, it suddenly dawned on him – the simple solution was to call a cab! After receiving a call for a cab from a male voice which originated from the same location where the other cab had been robbed, the dispatcher at the taxi company thought it would be prudent to call the police. A taxi was dispatched soon afterwards, but the driver was actually a police officer and the robber was quickly arrested. ("Hey, driver, there's an extra tip in it for you if you can get me home without being arrested!")

"Oh, and while I'm at it, I'd also like to nominate myself for 'Man of the Year' "... After consulting with a lawyer, the president of Massachusetts' Westfield State University was accused of billing the state for unauthorized travel expenses. Sources say he is now considering claiming that he actually "self-reported" the violations as soon as suspicions turned up. He says that would therefore make him entitled to protection under the state "whistle-blower" statute which shields inside informers when they expose wrongdoing. The president was recently placed on paid leave. (We should all be grateful that we have civic-minded whistle-blowers like this guy in our public institutions of higher learning!)

They also promised him that he could earn $25,000 per day by addressing envelopes from home... An Iowa lawyer was recently suspended for a year by the Attorney Disciplinary Board for mishandling client funds. One client had received a "Nigerian inheritance" letter in 2011 and the lawyer apparently jumped at the opportunity to receive "$18 million," seemingly unaware of what almost everyone else in the developed world knows about unsolicited Nigerian business scams. By December 2013, the lawyer had looted accounts of other clients in order to pay the "fees" necessary to free up the $18 million. He was spared a more onerous punishment only because the board concluded that he "honestly...continues to believe" that the inheritance is real – that "one day, a trunkful of...one hundred dollar bills is going to appear on his office doorstep." (The fact that he "honestly believes" the scam shouldn't be grounds for a light sentence!)

Among the items listed in the gift registry were razors, cigarettes, lengthy novels and lots of perfumed stationery... A female San Diego Superior Court Judge, perhaps sensing a whiff of romance in the courthouse, agreed to perform a wedding ceremony in her courtroom. The gleaming couple consisted of a groom to be who was accused of murder and his blushing fiancée. The judge even agreed to serve the lucky couple homemade cake afterward. However, the judge did all of that immediately after sentencing the man to a 53 year to life term for first-degree murder and for threatening a witness. (Frankly, court attendees were moved to tears when the bailiff gave the bride away.)

What do you suppose he had put on his résumé which got him the job?... "What are you doing?" the pot dealer asked the government investigator. The dealer owns Higher Expectations, a marijuana dispensary in Denver, Colorado. An investigator with the Denver Department of Environmental Health was standing on a street corner with a large conical device attached to his nose. His job is to investigate odor complaints. An odor is only illegal in Denver if five residents complain, or if it can still be detected even when the smelly air is mixed with seven times as much nonodorous air. That ratio hasn't been hit since 1994, but the investigator still goes out and clamps the "Nasal Ranger" on his face to investigate complaints. The Mile High City is considering changing its smell laws now that recreational pot is legal for most residents. (Denver must be so efficient in controlling serious crimes that they can afford to focus on those not quite so serious!)
